

Dear techUK Hiring Team,

Few positions bring together as directly the work I have delivered, the market perspective I have since developed and the contribution I now want to make.

As a German Chancellor Fellow, I researched India-Germany Fintech collaboration, and separately spent time volunteering on the Gulf Fintech Roadshow, researching regulation across the UAE, Oman, Qatar, Bahrain, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Jordan. Building bridges between countries, industries and companies, rather than staying inside just one, is the thread that runs through most of my career, which is what draws me to the Programme Manager, International Trade role.

Some of the most directly relevant experience includes:

Your ask	My evidence
Lead delivery of a portfolio of international trade programmes and events	At EY, I designed and delivered the Fintech Breakfasts, the Fintech Growth Programme and the Payments Forum, producing 15+ flagship events and two branded podcasts.
Plan and deliver trade missions, commercial delegations and inward missions	At The Fintech Meetup, I built Fintech Yatra, a deal-sourcing channel engaging 50+ startups and 20+ corporates across 10+ Indian cities, and I host recurring founder and investor dinners to keep that network active.
Build relationships with government departments, embassies and international partners	I helped shape and launch UK Finance's flagship market report at the Houses of Parliament, presenting findings to senior leadership and working group members from JPMorgan, Credit Suisse, Lloyds and Barclays.
Support business development, member recruitment and commercial delivery	At EY, I expanded the firm's account footprint across Barclays, JPMorgan Chase and the Asian Development Bank by building new propositions for each, contributing directly to account growth.
Comfortable working with people from different cultures, willing to travel internationally	As a German Chancellor Fellow, I researched India-Germany Fintech collaboration, and volunteered on the Gulf Fintech Roadshow researching regulation across seven Gulf states.

Across all of this, I care deeply about whether strategy can actually work - beyond the slide, report, blog or memo.

I bring a strong bias for turning a relationship into a concrete opportunity, not just a good conversation.

In the first year, I would seek to contribute in five practical ways:

- Map techUK's current international trade relationships and identify where new bilateral or sector-specific opportunities exist.
- Bring the UK-India ecosystem network I've already built at The Fintech Meetup into techUK's member base.
- Design and deliver at least one new trade mission or delegation, applying the events experience I built at EY.
- Support member recruitment by demonstrating concrete value from techUK's international programme early and often.
- Build relationships with relevant government departments and embassies to support Free Trade Agreement utilisation for members.

This opportunity feels like a natural progression from building Fintech ecosystems inside consulting firms and banks to building them for an entire industry through techUK's international trade programme.

I would be proud to bring my cross-border ecosystem-building experience to techUK's international trade programme.

Thank you for considering my application.

Regards, TT
