

Dear HSBC Hiring Team,

Few positions bring together as directly the work I have delivered, the market perspective I have since developed and the contribution I now want to make.

At The Fintech Meetup, I hold the mandate behind two active investment vehicles, a $12M CAT 1 AIF and a $40M CAT 2 AIF, sourcing and executing capital raises for fintech and deeptech startups. Applying for the Investment Manager role at HSBC Ventures feels like the natural next step, taking that same origination-to-execution mandate into a corporate venture team with the scale and distribution of one of the world's largest banks behind it.

Some of the most directly relevant experience includes:

Your ask	My evidence
Source and build a pipeline of relevant investment opportunities	I built a proprietary deal-sourcing channel at The Fintech Meetup, engaging 50+ fintech startups and 20+ corporates across 10+ cities to drive origination and deal velocity.
Lead evaluation of investment opportunities with quantitative and qualitative analysis	I lead buy-side market mapping and target identification, scoring companies against strategic fit and financial readiness, then drive transaction readiness by reviewing data rooms and structuring financial analysis.
Oversee investment papers and manage internal stakeholders and approvals	I engineer the investment thesis behind each deal to match specific institutional mandates, then manage the approval process directly with the fund's investment committees.
Support portfolio companies through connectivity, distribution and strategic support	I drive GTM and P&L growth for portfolio companies including Riskcovry, PayGlocal and Techfino, and run corporate scouting programmes for tier-1 financial institutions including TransUnion and NPCI to connect them with relevant solutions.
Strong FinTech network and relationship-building skills	I've built a cross-border network of VCs, family offices, DFIs and CVCs spanning the UK and India, and worked directly with Visa, Mastercard, Adyen and UK Finance on payments and fintech strategy at EY.

Across all of this, I care deeply about whether strategy can actually work - beyond the slide, report, blog or memo.

I bring a strong bias for getting close enough to a deal to know whether the underlying business actually works, not just whether the deck says it does.

In the first year, I would seek to contribute in five practical ways:

- Build out the AI, fintech and enterprise software sourcing pipeline, drawing on the network I've already built across the UK and India.
- Bring structure to early diligence, using the scoring and market-mapping approach I already run at The Fintech Meetup.
- Support portfolio companies on GTM and partnership questions from day one, not just after the deal closes.
- Learn HSBC's internal approval and investment committee process well enough to move deals through it without unnecessary delay.
- Start building relationships across HSBC's wider business so portfolio companies get real distribution, not just capital.

This opportunity feels like a natural progression from running deal origination and execution independently to doing it with the scale and distribution of a global bank behind me.

I would be proud to bring my origination-to-execution experience and cross-border fintech network to HSBC Ventures.

Thank you for considering my application.

Regards, TT
